One of the main themes in Patrick's work is a portrayal of post-apocalyptic dwellings. They appear suspended in mid-air, contrasting the before and after. Every piece tells a story, leaving you to wonder about backstories and the future.

Urban decay meets the power of nature. With tree's sprouting out of the buildings, they reclaim the land that was once destroyed. Returning the world to a more natural state. The sculptures are extremely detailed depictions of imagination and elaborately crafted. The human subjects found in the sculptures demonstrate a desire to hold onto what was once dear to them. On the other hand they can be interpreted as enjoying their newly discovered, simpler way of life. Whatever you think of the pieces, one thing is certain, they are hauntingly beautiful and a sobering reminder of what may come if we continue to live the way we do.
